AMHERST COLLEGE.

From Our Special Correspondent.

AMHERST, July 12, 1866.

From New-York to Springfield, Mass., from Springfield to Northampton by rail, and thence over a good and smooth road through a charming country, by private conveyance to Amherst, a charming place. Here is Amherst College, and this is commencement week, the exercises closing this afternoon.

Before giving an account of these exercises, which were of an unusually interesting character, it will be well to give a few details of the College in itself.

Amherst College is a small college, with a limited number of students, and a large number of professors.

The number of students in the College is 100, while the number of professors is 12, and the number of buildings 12.

The College is situated in a very quiet and peaceful place, with a fine view of the surrounding country.

The College is a large building, with a central tower.

The interior of the building is very spacious, and the rooms are well lighted and well ventilated.
